Jawai × Udaipur

ESCAPE 001

Come looking for the wild. Leave with a story.

Out of Delhi on a night train, two days in Jawai's granite leopard country, then three hours east for one long, slow day in Udaipur. Five days, two of them spent travelling overnight, and eighteen people who arrive not knowing each other.

WHAT WE'RE ACTUALLY BUILDING

You don't just visit a place. You experience it.

Outway Club is not a weekend-trip company. The trips are the way in. What we are building is a different way to travel — fewer places, longer in each, and real time with the people who live there. Four preferences decide every call we make, from who we eat with to what we leave out.

People > Places

A place is the reason you booked. The people are the reason you remember it.

Stories > Sightseeing

Anyone can stand in front of a fort. We would rather you left knowing why.

Experiences > Itineraries

A full schedule is easy to sell and exhausting to live. Empty hours are in the plan.

Community > Customers

You arrive not knowing anyone. You leave on a group thread that stays open.

HOW AN ESCAPE IS DESIGNED

Five things decide what goes in, and what gets left out. Every one of them removes something — that is how you can tell they are real.

| 01 | People | You come for the destination. You remember the people. |
| 02 | Place | Understand a place, don't just visit it. |
| 03 | Culture | Participate, don't observe from outside. |
| 04 | Experience | Curate the journey, don't fill every minute. |
| 05 | Connection | Arrive with strangers. Leave with stories. |

Escape 001 is built the wrong way round on purpose. Most Rajasthan trips start with the postcard and end somewhere quieter; this one starts in the quiet. You leave Delhi on a night train and wake up at Jawai Bandh, where the Aravallis have stopped being hills and turned into enormous bare granite domes sitting straight out of the ground. Breakfast is slow and nothing is scheduled until you have actually looked at the place. Then you meet it properly — time with a Rabari shepherd family in the country they have herded for generations, and an afternoon out in an open jeep with a naturalist who can tell you which family of leopards is denning where. Around fifty of them live on these rocks, directly above villages that have never hunted one. We are not going to promise you a sighting. The sighting is never promised. The experience is. Day two is deliberately unhurried: the dam and the crocodiles on its bank in the morning, the cave temple at Devgiri where the priests and the leopards have an arrangement nobody has written down, and then an afternoon with nothing in it at all, because an escape should not feel like work. Both evenings end around a table and a fire, with a question — what made you say yes to this journey, and later, what surprised you most about this place. On the last morning the trip changes character completely. Three hours east and Rajasthan turns from granite into water: Udaipur's old city on foot, lunch somewhere a local would actually eat, an hour of your own, and the lake at last light with the phones away. Dinner is the whole group at one table, then everybody writes a letter to somebody they met four days ago and hands it over. You leave on the overnight coach still talking, and you get into Delhi on Tuesday morning having spent two days of leave.

WHAT YOU'LL REMEMBER

The moments this escape was built around

- Two nights in Jawai, which is two more than almost anybody gives it — enough to stop being a visitor and start recognising the place

- Meet the Land: real time with a Rabari shepherd family, in the granite country they have herded for generations

- An open-jeep exploration of Jawai with a local naturalist, built around understanding the landscape rather than chasing a photograph

- Devgiri, the cave temple in the granite, where priests and leopards have shared a hill for longer than anyone can date

- Jawai Bandh at first light: still water, mugger crocodiles on the bank, and whatever has flown in that week

- The Story Circle — a fire, a sky full of stars, and one question: tell us about a journey that changed you

- The Road Between Two Worlds: three hours that take you from bare granite to lake water without leaving the state

- Udaipur at golden hour with the phones away, then The Last Table and The Letter

STARTING POINT

Delhi — we meet on the platform on the night of departure, and the exact station comes with your ticket

BEST TIME

September to March, greenest in September and coolest from November

Leave Ordinary

FRIDAY 4 SEPTEMBER

The journey starts on a platform in Delhi, with people you have not met. Your Outway host finds you, hands you a Journey Card, and that is the last piece of admin for five days. The train pulls out late and the carriage does what carriages do — somebody has snacks, somebody has a speaker, somebody knows a card game, and at some point the question goes round that this whole thing is built on: what made you say yes to this journey? Answers vary wildly and that is the interesting part. Sleep when you feel like it. Tomorrow is deliberately unhurried, so an imperfect night on a train costs you nothing at all.

Evening 8:30 PM	Meet your Outway host and the group on the platform in Delhi
Departure 10:25 PM	The overnight train west, booked with the group so nobody travels in alone
On board	Journey Cards, introductions, and the first question: what made you say yes to this journey?
Late	Music, chai, a card game, and whoever is still awake
	Sleep. Day 01 does not start early

- Breakfast — not included
- Lunch — not included
- Dinner — not included
- Stay: Overnight train, Delhi to Jawai Bandh

You see Jawai before the train stops. The hills flatten out and then the granite starts — enormous smooth domes sitting straight out of the scrub, nothing like the Rajasthan on the postcards. We collect you at Jawai Bandh and take you to the camp, and then we deliberately do nothing for a while. Breakfast is slow. Nobody is rushed into a jeep. The first thing that happens here is that somebody who lives here explains the place to you, because Jawai makes no sense until you understand the arrangement it runs on: the Rabari have herded these hills for generations, around fifty leopards live on the rocks directly above the villages, and in living memory neither has killed the other. Late afternoon is when the granite gives its warmth back and the cats come out onto it, so that is when we go out — an open jeep, a naturalist who knows which family is denning where, and no promises. The sighting is never promised. The experience is. Afterwards we take chai up onto a rock for the sunset and stay past the point where anybody would normally head back to their room. Dinner is outside. If the fire is allowed, there is a fire, and around it the Story Circle: tell us about a journey that changed you.

Morning 9:50 AM	Into Jawai Bandh, and the granite starts before the station does
Slow breakfast 10:30 AM	At the camp. Nothing is scheduled for an hour and that is deliberate
Meet the Land 12:00 PM	Time with a Rabari shepherd family, with a local host who can translate more than the language
Rest 2:00 PM	The afternoon heat is not a thing worth fighting
Late afternoon 4:00 PM	Open-jeep exploration of Jawai with a local naturalist
Jawai Sunset 6:45 PM	Chai on a granite dome, and nobody in a hurry to leave
After dark 8:30 PM	Dinner, stars, a fire where it is permitted, and The Story Circle

- Breakfast — included
- Lunch — included
- Dinner — included
- Stay: Jawai — camp in leopard country, twin sharing

No packed sightseeing today, and no apology for it. Breakfast runs long, the coffee is good, and the hills are doing exactly nothing in particular. Mid-morning we go down to Jawai Bandh — the dam is full this time of year, mugger crocodiles sit out on the banks, and whatever has flown in for the season is out on the water. From there it is a short way to Devgiri, a cave temple set into the granite where local families have come to worship for as long as anyone can date, often with a leopard asleep on the rock above them. Nobody there finds that remarkable, which is the most remarkable thing about it. Lunch is Marwari, cooked by people who live here. Then the afternoon is yours, genuinely: read, photograph, sleep, talk, walk, or nothing. An escape should not feel like work. If the group wants a second time out in the jeep and the season allows it, we go — and if we do not, this list does not get padded to look bigger. The last night in Jawai is The Outway Table: everybody, one dinner, and the question that turns a group into something else. What surprised you most about this place?

Slow morning 8:00 AM	Breakfast, coffee, and no agenda until you have finished both
Beyond the Leopard 10:00 AM	Jawai Bandh at its fullest, the muggers on the bank, and the birds that come with the water
Devgiri 11:30 AM	The cave temple in the granite, where the priests and the leopards share a hill
The local table 1:00 PM	Marwari lunch, cooked by people who live here
Your Afternoon 2:30 PM	Free. Read, photograph, sleep, talk, or nothing at all
Second Wild 4:00 PM	An optional second time out, if the group wants it and the season allows
The Outway Table 8:30 PM	Last dinner in Jawai: what surprised you most about this place?

- Breakfast — included
- Lunch — included
- Dinner — included
- Stay: Jawai — camp in leopard country, twin sharing

Three hours east, and Rajasthan changes species. The granite gives way to green Aravalli ridges, the ridges give way to water, and you arrive in a city that has spent four hundred years being decorative. We call this stretch The Road Between Two Worlds and we treat it as part of the journey rather than a transfer — the windows are the point, there is music, there are the stories that only come out once a group has been together three days, and there is one stop along it worth making. Udaipur starts on foot. Not a monument race: a walk through the old city with somebody who lives in it and can tell you why the lanes are the shape they are, what the doors mean, and which of it is actually old. Lunch is a food experience rather than the nearest restaurant with a table free. Then an hour is yours — a café, a camera, the shops, or a wall by the water. Golden hour is the last thing we plan, and it is the one we ask you to put your phone away for: the lake, the light going, and enough quiet to notice that four days have happened. Dinner is everybody at one table, and one question. Then everybody writes a letter to somebody they met on Saturday, and hands it over. The coach out is late enough that nobody has to cut that short.

Check out 8:30 AM	Breakfast, goodbyes to the camp, then the road
The Road Between Two Worlds 9:30 AM	Three hours east through the Aravallis, with one stop worth making
Walk Into the Story 1:00 PM	Udaipur's old city on foot with a local host. Places and stories, not a monument race
The Local Table 2:30 PM	Lunch as a food experience, not the nearest restaurant with a free table
Your Udaipur Hour 4:00 PM	Cafés, cameras, shopping, walking, or a wall by the water
Golden Hour 6:15 PM	The lake at last light. Phones away for this one
The Last Table 8:00 PM	Final dinner together: what are you taking home from this journey?
The Letter 9:30 PM	Write to someone you met here. Exchange before you leave
Departure 10:30 PM	Private overnight coach, Udaipur to Delhi

Return Home

TUESDAY 8 SEPTEMBER

Into Delhi in the morning, two days of leave spent. Nobody goes home a stranger — the group thread stays open, the photographs land on it over the next week, and so does the answer to whatever you forgot to ask on Monday night. That is the part of this that does not fit in an itinerary, and it is the part people write to us about afterwards.

Morning

Into Delhi

The group thread stays open, and so does the invitation

- Breakfast — not included
- Lunch — not included
- Dinner — not included

You don't have to know anyone before you come. That's the point.

Most people on an Outway escape book alone. The group is capped small enough that everyone is at one table by the first evening, and every evening has something in it whose only job is to make that easy — a question round a fire, a shared dinner, a letter written to somebody you met four days ago. Nothing about that appears on an invoice, and it is the thing people write to us about six months later.

WHAT YOU'RE REALLY BOOKING

- Conversations. Not a bus seat and a hotel key. The people sitting next to you are the actual product
- Local stories, told locally. A Rabari family's, a naturalist's, a boatman's. Told by them, not repeated by us
- Unhurried time. Whole hours with nothing scheduled in them, deliberately, because that is where a trip becomes a journey
- One place, understood. Two days in Jawai instead of six towns photographed from a moving vehicle
- A group that learns your name. Eighteen people, one table each evening, four days
- The experience, not the sighting. Jawai is wild country. We will never sell you a leopard we cannot promise

What's included, what isn't, what to pack

Included

- ✓ 2 nights in Jawai, in a camp in leopard country, on twin sharing
- ✓ An open-jeep Jawai exploration with a local naturalist
- ✓ Meet the Land: a curated, responsibly arranged experience with a Rabari host
- ✓ Private air-conditioned transport across the whole ground route, including the 150km crossing to Udaipur
- ✓ A walk through Udaipur's old city with a local host who lives in it
- ✓ 2 breakfasts, 2 lunches and 3 dinners, including The Outway Table in Jawai and The Last Table in Udaipur
- ✓ All entry fees named in the journey
- ✓ An Outway host with the group from the Delhi platform to the Delhi platform
- ✓ All applicable taxes: the price you see is the price you pay

Things to carry

- Original government photo ID, mandatory on the train and at check-in, no exceptions
- Neutral colours for the safari — no white, no bright red
- One warm layer. An open jeep at dusk in the hills is colder than the day suggests
- A light rain jacket. Early September still catches the end of the monsoon

Not included

- ✗ The Delhi legs. We book the overnight train out and the private overnight coach back alongside the group, and you pay the fare at cost — nothing is marked up on it
- ✗ Anything eaten on the train, and lunch on the day you leave Delhi
- ✗ A second Jawai safari, if the group wants one. Quoted separately, and never added just to make this list longer
- ✗ Personal expenses, shopping, tips and anything at the bar
- ✗ Travel insurance, we strongly recommend arranging your own
- ✗ Single-occupancy upgrade, available on request and quoted separately

- Comfortable walking shoes, and something you can slip off quickly at a temple
- Modest clothing for Devgiri and Udaipur's old-city temples: shoulders and knees covered
- Sunscreen, a refillable water bottle, and anything you need for motion sickness on the ghat roads
- Something to write with. Day 03 ends with a letter, and a borrowed pen is a poor start to one

Is this your kind of journey?

18 people share this one. We would genuinely rather you read the right-hand column and book something else than read it afterwards.

This is for you if

- ✓ You want to travel without knowing anyone. Most people on this book alone. You do not have to know anybody before you come. That is the point
- ✓ You would rather understand one place than tick off six
- ✓ You are comfortable with an afternoon that has nothing planned in it
- ✓ You are curious about people, not only about monuments
- ✓ You want the wild without a national park gate, a numbered zone and a queue of jeeps

Not for you if

- ✗ You want a guaranteed leopard. Jawai is open country, not an enclosure, and we will not pretend otherwise to close a booking
- ✗ You want ten places in three days. This does the opposite, on purpose
- ✗ You want a private trip. This one is shared, and the sharing is the product
- ✗ You need five-star standards throughout. Jawai is camp country. It is comfortable and well run, and it is not a city hotel
- ✗ You would rather not talk to anyone. Every evening here is built around a conversation

“You came for the destination. You leave remembering the people.”
